LOS ANGELES, Oct. 15 (UPI) -- A sculpture honoring the millions of people who perished in World War II death camps is going on display at the Los Angeles Museum of the Holocaust.

The Gallery of Historical Figures has announced "The Holocaust," a realistic sculpture by G.S. Stuart, will be on display at the museum until Nov. 15 after which it will then enter a private collection in New York.

"This compassionate sculpture captures the suffering of concentration camp prisoners. It reaches out to our museum visitors in a profoundly evocative way," Mark Rothman, executive director of the museum said in a statement. "We are thrilled to give it a temporary home."

Stuart's works are known for high historical accuracy and attention to detail and many of his 400-plus Historical Figures are in museums, including the Smithsonian Institution.

In southern California, the Museum of Ventura County exhibits their collection of 200 Historical Figures on a rotating basis, the Gallery of Historical Figures said.
